ONE-SENTENCE SYNOPSIS

After her alcoholic father burns her late mother's photograph, which was her only solace in her lonely, oppressive life, an underprivileged adolescent girl alone sets out to find a copy of it.

SYNOPSIS

During the 1970s, when many people could not afford photos of their loved ones, Roshni (13), an underprivileged village girl, is fortunate to have a photo of her late mother. This photo is her only solace in her lonely, oppressive existence until one day it is too taken away from her when her alcoholic father burns it in a drunken rage.

Determined to find a copy of her mother's photo, Roshni travels long distances, all alone, coming across all kinds of people. Finally, when she reaches Hari Ram, the old Anglo-Indian photographer, who took her mother's image decades ago; to her dismay, he has completely forgotten about the photo. Moreover, he has become blind, grumpy and impossible to get along with. Luckily, Errol, Hari's age-old caretaker, persuades Hari to let Roshni stay in the house. Roshni soon returns the favour by helping Errol find certain photos crucial for a book that Hari has a writing contract for. Later, she also helps revive Hari's name as a writer. But just when things start going great for them all, Errol dies, leaving a gaping hole in their lives.

With the passing years, Roshni, having failed to find her mother's photo, learns photography from Hari in the hopes of finding her mother's negative. Concurrently they form an anonymous, precious bond only to realise they are not alone anymore. But one day, by some quirk of fate, Alice, Hari's estranged daughter, returns from England.

Roshni and Hari both find themselves torn as each must make a choice now; for him - between Alice and Roshni, and for her - between staying and leaving her only true home.

In the end, Roshni does not find her mother's photo, but what she finds during this long, eventful journey is love and a larger goal in her life.

DIRECTOR'S STATEMENT

"Is it true that whatever happens, happens for good?"

A Life Lost and Found, while not a biopic, is inspired by the real-life story of one of the most acclaimed Indian DoPs, Ravi Varman, whose yearning to possess a photo of his late mother placed him on a path that became his profession and took him places.

I felt an instant connection with Mr. Varman's story because it reminded me of my grandfather. My grandfather died when my father was three and the only way my father visualised him was through his photo. Unfortunately, the photo had been damaged even before I was born. It is sad that most people in those days were not as lucky as my father was.

I have made a few basic changes in the original story to make it more intriguing. For example, changing the protagonist from a boy to a girl makes the character more vulnerable and her journey more interesting, especially in the 1970s when women in society were oppressed under a system of structural hierarchies and injustices. Besides, making the photographer blind forces the young girl to go beyond her limits and make something out of her life. I believe Roshni's journey will inspire other girls like her to build a better future for themselves.

Through this film I want to portray the character of "Life" while touching upon the then contemporary issues (most of which govern our society even today) - prejudices, family, socio-economic development, Anglo-Indian identity crisis and social malpractices. This will create awareness, drive social action and bring about micro-level changes in mind and behaviour of individuals, thus positively impacting our society. In addition, I want to pay my tribute to the art of photography, which enables us to capture life's precious moments that otherwise get erased from our memory.
